

A Parable for the Coming Age

By Diana Coldman, The Life Whisperer

“And it came to pass in those times that humanity began to awaken as if from a deep slumber. Something stirred in the collective conscious that rippled across the planet, much like a pebble thrown into a pond causes ripples to form in ever widening circles. At first the effects of this ripple were almost indiscernible – faint echoes of a time when humanity’s authenticity and origins were known, respected and revered by the indigenous peoples. These faint echoes began to spread out to the masses and those with ears to hear and eyes to see started to recognise that the world was not as they had been led to believe. Discoveries of wrongdoings began to emerge – lies, deceit, greed, corruption and a lust for control. All these things were known at some level of course, but now the threads of previously hidden agendas were being revealed. Slowly at first, but then at ever increasing speed, the extent of control and suppression began to surface. As this knowledge passed from human to human, the effect was felt at the very core of All That Is and Ever Will Be. The echo was like the signal from a sonar boom that reveals the whereabouts of a large immovable object or the source of a problem. This echo was so large that there was a quantum leap in knowledge and understanding across the planet. Truth was finally being revealed in all things. For it was truth that was sought; truth about humankind’s divine origin and connection to the All That Is and Ever Will Be. Truth of the bountiful nature of a Universe that is designed to provide for everyone and which humans are free to enjoy through the matrix of a living, breathing planet. Truth of human’s sovereignty that allows free will to be the choice point for learning and experience, so long as those choices cause no harm or loss to another human, animal, plant or natural being of the planet.

As this knowledge spread exponentially, those that portended to control the population began to tighten their grip in the last vestiges of a battle they could no longer hope to win. In a frantic bid to maintain the status quo, they unleashed terrible plans on humankind that caused great fear. Fear had been the method by which humans had been kept asleep for so long and the would-be elite controllers used this to great effect. Micro-chipping to monitor everyone’s tiniest movement; compulsory drugging and vaccination of children to control behaviour; genetically-modified food; restriction of natural healthcare; false flag terrorist attacks in order to keep citizens in fear; enslavement to an out-dated monetary debt-based system that ensured the masses worked in order to pay the deficit and keep the elite controllers in splendour; legislation that eroded human liberties daily – these were just some of the tactics employed. Large numbers of humans continued to sleep, fearful of the consequences of waking up and recognising their own divine and sovereign power. Whilst the would-be controllers gained short term satisfaction, their strategy was ultimately flawed and their downfall inevitable. In the same way as a healing crisis may cause an intensification of symptoms immediately prior to recovery, an increase in fear led to humankind's greatest moment. The spiritual awakening that had been building had reached critical mass and nothing could now hold back the ascension of humankind. Human consciousness, emitted and held in the Universal field of love, finally broke the chains of slavery and control for good, to shine light into and dissolve the darkness of fear. The divine origins and spiritual inheritance of humans was finally recognised and revered once again. Sustainable and renewable energy, naturally grown foods, natural healthcare systems and healing methods were pursued as the highest ideals. Natural skills such as telepathy, clairvoyance and clairsentience were once again used for the benefit of all. Living in harmony with the planetary matrix, animals and plants - this was the focus for the different countries that found ways to co-operate and co-exist. New methods of exchange currency were created that sustained everyone and the debt-based monetary system ceased to exist.

The transition to this new age was not an easy time however. The matrix of fear had infiltrated into the very fabric of Mother Earth, which attempted to throw off negative energies and rebalance herself through violent shaking, eruption, storms and floods. In those days she spat hot splinters of black glass high into the atmosphere which resulted in paralysing transport systems; she moved her underlying plates around resulting in earthquakes of great magnitude, sending giant shockwaves around the globe and huge tsunamis. There was great loss of life from these natural disasters as well as from the wars, control measures and other terrible doings unleashed by the elite controllers. Many humans were destroyed or chose at soul level to leave and the population was greatly reduced. Those that stayed vowed to never again experience such a traumatic transition. Humanity finally took control of their own destiny, throwing off the shackles of slavery and leaving the would-be elite controllers to their inevitable fate - banishment forever.

Earth was cleansed. At the outer edge of consciousness humans had finally learned the lesson of partaking in a harmonious physical existence and took their first tentative steps towards that which had been revealed aeons ago in ancient calendars and traditions – the beginning of a new age.”
